Contracts Awarded for Three Streets

Just about the time the sewer-diggers get through with their job on the streets of this city, Contracor Sidney Ruthven and his crew will begin tearing up Seventh, Ninth and Twelfth avenues, preparatory to improvement.

At last Monday night's meeting of the city trustees, said Ruthven was awarded the contracts for paving these three thoroughfares, he being the only bidder.

Stroud Brothers and Seabrook, sewer contractors, were granted an extension of ninety days to complete their work here. It was at this point that Trustees J. B. Dennis and C. O. Goold had a little "run-in." The former called attention to the impassable condition of the streets and demanding that they be put in condition by the contractors, and the latter stating that the contractors were doing the best they could.

A motion was adopted to pay the third note of $1000 due on the fire wagon.

Clerk Saidee Van Brower was instructed to ask property owners on the east side of Dolores street, opposite the postoffice, to clear their sidewalks.

Adjourned—early.

Carmelites Attend Alexander Comedy

A number of Carmelites are motoring to San Jose this afternoon to witness "The Purple Pigeon," a musical comedy in two acts and a prologue, presented by a cast of fifty San Jose High School players, under the supervision of the music, dramatic and art departments.

The lyrics and dialogue were written by Irene E. Alexander, the dramatics' coach of the high school, who is well known here.

The music and orchestration is the work ofGeorge T. Matthews, head of the music department, formerly associated with the University High School of Oakland.

The scenery for the opera, which depicts the courtyard of the castle in the Forgotten Kingdom, was designed and painted by the art department, while the costumes are the contribution of the costume design class and instructor. The vocational department of the high school printed all tickets, programs an dposters for the performance, and the metal shop designed and constructed two new baby spots for effective lighting.

Supervisors Discuss Highway Changes

The Board of Supervisors of San Benito County are confering with the Monterey County Supervisors regarding the proposed re-routing of the State Highway between San Juan and Salinas. The plan would include turning the present road over the San Juan Grade back to the two counties to maintain as a county road.

The San Juan City Trustees are opposed to the project because they fear it would leave their town off the main state highway, and the San Benito county supervisors are prepared to tell the Monterey county board they cannot endorse the project but will offer no opposition provided it is shown to be the best and most practical route.

MOVING TO CARMEL

Palo Alto and Stanford University are well represented in the week's arrivals, among the vacationers being: Prof. and Mrs. George J. Pierce and daughters, Prof. and Mrs. Charles B. Wing, Mrs. Clay Miller and sons, Mrs. William Kimball and two grandsons, Mrs. Raymond M. Alden, Prof. and Mrs. Karl G. Rendtorff and daughter, Mrs. John W. Mitchell, Dr. and Mrs. Norris W. Rakestraw, Miss Florence Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Graves, and Miss Kate Matheson.

Pine Cone Press Installs New Typesetting Machine

With pride, not only on its own account, but in behalf of its patrons, the Pine Cone Press announces the installation of a Linotype.

This mechanical marvel is especially equipped to serve the subscribers to and advertisers in the Pine Cone and also the patrons of the printing department.

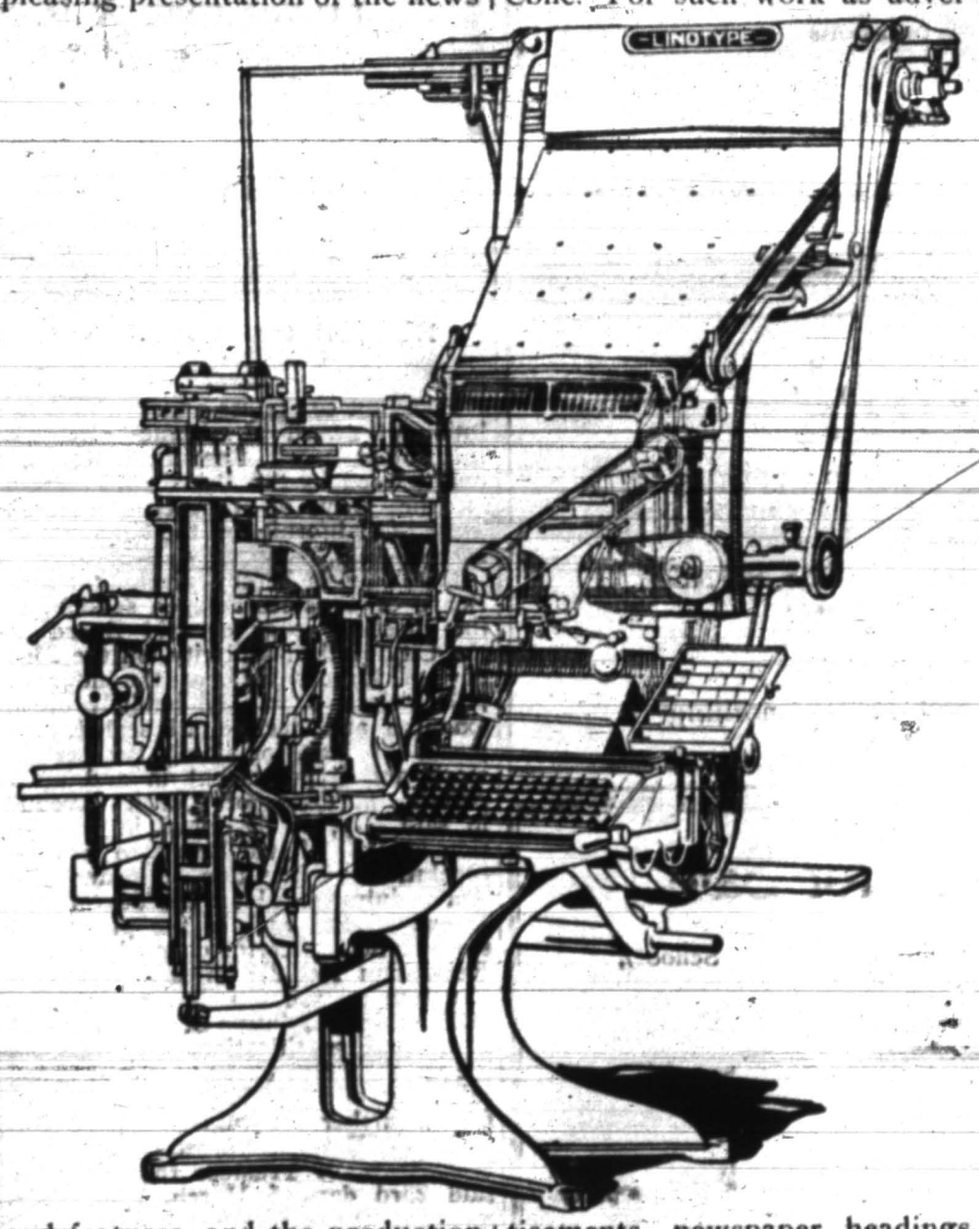
The increasing circulation of the Pine Cone, and the demands of advertisers and others for more varied typography, induced the Pine Cone to install a Linotype for the quick, accurate and pleasing presentation of the news and features, and the production of superior job work of every character. The Linotype enables us to set by machine nearly all forms of composition that formerly necessitated tedious work by hand.

This installation is a testimonial to the prosperity of Carmel and vicinity. And that the people of the community are duly appreciative of this effort to serve efficiently in all departments of the printing business is manifested by the many complimentary remarks received from the patrons since the arrival of the machine.

The accompanying illustration will give some idea of the marvellous mechanism of the Linotype, which is a machine on which are assembled matrices (or molds) and lines of type cast—lines such as you are now reading.

Besides enabling the operator to set type, the Linotype makes it possible for him to produce the rules, dashes and borders which are used in various advertisements of each issue of the Pine Cone. For such work as advertisements, newspaper headings, booklets, catalogues and various other kinds of printed matter, the Linotype enables one operator to set in the same time more type than can ordinarily be produced by five or six men or women doing the work by hand.

While for a long time the Pine Cone has received the patronage of a host of readers, advertisers and printing buyers in general, still an increased volume of business is anticipated, now that we are so well qualified to render the sort of service most to be desired.



PRAISE FOR CARMEL POET

"Tamar," the book of poetry by Robinson Jeffers, of Carmel, has been released by the publishers and received enthusiastic praise from some of the most prominent critics.

George Sterling is quoted as saying that without doubt Jeffers proves himself one of the foremost American poets. Carmel is prideful of having Jeffers in her midst and is particularly pleased that the inspiration for his poems comes from the natural beauties of Carmel and its environs.

THE ELECTION

The result of the local school bond election and the election for members of the Sunset and Monterey high school boards of trustees will be posted at the Pine Cone office this morning.

The pupils of Forest Hill Outdoor School, chaperoned by Mrs. Minna Steel Harper, inspected every unit of the Pine Cone Press new mechanical department last Wednesday. They showed an especially intelligent interest in the new Linotype.

Local Players in Triple Bill

Three well-balanced plays at Arts and Crafts Friday night have given us a lot to talk about. We think "Sham" a really amusing play, with an original idea. We liked "The Sire de Maletroit's Door" with its grimly beautiful setting of old romance and old cruelty long ago, and we think Gladys Vander Roest in that medieval wedding gown Rhoda Johnson made her was one of the loveliest things ever seen on a Carmel stage, and with a voice that matched her looks. We admired Blanche Tolmie's adroit handling of her tiny operetta, with that competent musician, Roberta Leitch singing opposite her, and an excellent pianist off-stage.

Now we wonder about a lot of things—whether George Ball is going to be better as a producer than as an actor (we know we like him as an actor), how many more priest-roles Tom Bickle is going to play; which of his two parts Winsor Josselyn liked best, and how Dr. Burton made that very big red flower on the window sill in the Paris attic set for the operetta.

The plays are to be repeated tonight. People are going to talk for some time about "The Sire de Maletroit's Door."

Prominent Rancher Mourned by Many

Tom Oliver, native of Monterey, prominent citizen and one of the best known ranchers in this vicinity, passed away on Friday morning of last week. Mr. Oliver was never the same man following a serious accident five years ago, but had been able to attend to his vast business interests. His ranch on the coast road, north of Point Lobos, is a peninsula landmark.

Deceased leaves a wife and several children, among whom is Mrs. Grace Selby, in business in this city.

The funeral was held last Monday morning from the ranch house to San Carlos Church where high mass was held, with Rev. Raymond Mestress officiating. Interment was at the Catholic Cemetary in Monterey.

Many beautiful floral offerings were sent, and a large gathering of friends of this California pioneer attended the funeral.

The honorary pall-bearers were: T. J. Field, T. A. Work, J. A. Saprolini, W. J. Hudson, E. Hatton, L. D. Lacy. The active pall-bearers were: A. M. Osio, S. G. Clifford, F. A. Serrano, Frank Duarte, Joe Duarte and A. Passedori.

WE'LL TELL THE WORLD

Carmel is in direct communication with the Antipodes. At 4:30 last Monday morning, I. H. O'Meara, of Gisborne, New Zealand, and Dr. Claire Foster talked back and forth for half an hour, via the radio.

CONDEMNATION SUIT

The Carmel Sanitary District Board, to acquire right of way for a sewer line, has filed a condemnation suit in the Superior Court for thirty one-hundredths of an acre on the property of Mrs. Florence E. Wells, in the southern part of the city.

District Attorney Albert Warth is representing the Sanitary Board, and Attorney David Oliphant of Oakland will probably handle the cast for Mrs. Wells.

MC ADAM - PEDERSON

Genevieve Mc Adam, well-known dancing instructor, and Richard Peterson, grocer, both of this city, were married Thursday afternoon at Del Monte Chapel, Rev. F. E. Cutting officiating. Mrs. Esther Teare gave the bride away. Mrs. Bruce Monahan was maid of honor, and Francis Murphy was best man.

MOVIES AT GOLDEN BOUGH

Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Kuster arrived in San Francisco from Honolulu last Tuesday, and were met at the gang-plank by Mrs. Kuster's mother and R. C. Bromwell. They will be here in a few days. Then they will plunge into their labor of love at the Golden Bough. While in San Francisco, Mr. Kuster completed bookings for the showing of high-class motion pictures in the Golden Bough, beginning early next month.

Mrs. Valentine Mott Porter leaves Monday to spend a week in Santa Barbara.

"Black Daughter"--- a Story of Africa

It is seldom that one comes across such an intensely vital picture of any country as Llewelyn Powys gives us in "Black Daughter." When a man of his temperament, sensitive and fine, leaves the quiet, peaceful lanes of rural England and goes seeking health, into the heart of blackest Africa, the contrast is bound to stir his nature to the depths .

The nights of Africa! How frightful they were to him—wild, dark and treacherous, with terror and murder afoot. Full of strange, mysterious and horrible noises — wild beasts tracking down their prey, the piteous death-cries of animals, tragedies of the untamed jungle. Night after night it goes on, with nature "red in tooth and claw." Even after several years association with the jungle, he never overcame the sense of danger and foreboding as night approached.

In the midst of this tangled waste, he would sometimes come upon beauty of the most delicate loveliness. On a flat rock in the centre of a pool, right in the heart of the forest, he once found a group of many-coloured butterflies. "The spectacle of this flimsy, trivolous super-refined gathering, so impossibly fragile, so impossibly lovely, in a most strange way startled me into appreciating the outlandish sophistication of a continent capable of producing, after its own amazing fashion such abnormal contrasts as are presented to the eye by the appearance of a gorbellied rhinoceros and the decorative beauty of the shimmering denizens of that parched stone."

As an artist, Llewelyn Powys is keenly aware of everything around him. Not only does he make one feel the throb of the great wild heart of Africa, but the human contacts which he makes are many and interesting. One of the finest and most revealing of these was the instance of a travelling Somali who was benighted and sought shelter at his house. The Somalis are the most courteous and fastidious of men, but Powys, being new to the country, treated his guest like any other native. When the traveller asked for the loan of an extra blanket, as the nights were cold, he was carelessly given a thick rug which had been used for covering the mule.

"I offered him the wrap, he looked at it, saw the gray hairs on it, and he returned it to me in silence, but with an expression on his proud, finely-bred features of such infinite contempt that I felt that my ignoble action had in some way put me completely outside the pale of some unwritten standard of behaviour taken for granted amongst gentlemen in the commonwealth of the human race."

The book takes its name from a gruesome experience with a native witch-doctor whom the author had displeased The man had been helping himself to his cattle and Powys had found it necessary to remonstrate. The following night he was awakened by the sound of wild, lunatic laughter. "It was as if some insane inhabitant of the frightful continent had suddenly become articulate under the swinging, frantic moon and had found himself impelled to give appalling utterance to all that his doomed race had suffered."

He could endure it no longer. His nerves gave way, and pressing his fingers to his ears, he tried to shut out those piercing shrieks. Gradually he realized that the room was filled with the putrid odor of the breath of a hyena and near the door he could distinguish a dark shape. It was there and it was gone. In the morning he found the tracks o fa thing with the foot of a hyena and the foot of a man. He does not try to explain this, but simply states it as he experienced it, and in such a way that it makes the flesh creep and fills one with the ancient dread of supernatural things.

Following this experience came drought, sickness among the cattle and the natives, and in short, a serie of disasters that would have discouraged many a stronger man. Finally Llewelyn Powys met his brother and started towards the coast en route for home.

But the stark, tragic grandeur of that wilderness has left an impression which he can never forget, and the reader, after putting down the book, will never again think of Africa without feeling the pulsation of that intense jungle life on its age-long quest for blood. It leaves a strange indefinable sense of beauty and terror, of pitiless scorching days and dark, dark nights quivering with the fearful voices of the wilds, and the black laughter of a primitive, superstitious, untaught race.

Salinas Preparing for Odd Big Week

In Salinas, on a visit from Sacramento, where he is secretary of the livestock protective bureau of the state department of agriculture, Arthur Hebbron, president of the California Rodeo and Salinas Big Week Association, states that activities will soon be under way for the coming of the cowboys and the big annual roundup to be held in Salinas in July.

Committees of the Rodeo end have been quietly at work for some time outlining plans, so that little remains to be done in that line. A meeting will be held soon to name committees to take charge of the Big Week fiesta, which will be held in connection with the rodeo.

Hebbron was pleased to note that work is progressing satisfactorily on the new $40,000 grandstands at the rodeo grounds.

He states that indications point to record attendance this year and that the stands, having a seating capacity of 9000, will undoubtedly be none too large.

Salvation Army Concert

On Saturday and Sunday, April 4th and 5th, the local Salvation Army corps will be hosts to the Territorial Staff Band of the Salvation Army, which will be in Monterey and the peninsula for a series of concerts on these dates. The staff band is directed by Ensign Ernst Higgins, who is the son of Commissioner Higgins of London, England, second in command of all Salvation Army forces in the world. Young Higgins is said to be an accomplished director for his youthful years, and has directed concerts for the Salvation Army all over the western territory, which includes eleven western states and the territory of Hawaii.

The first concert will be held in Monterey, on Saturday, April 4th, at 7:30 p. m., in the Presbyterian Church, Pacific and Franklin. On Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock, the band will conduct open air services on the corner of Forest and Lighthouse, Pacific Grove. From there they will go to the Presbyterian Church in Monterey, and conduct an indoor service beginning at 11:00 a. m., sharp. Sunday afternoon, April 5th, the band will present a special concert at Hotel Del Monte at 1:30. Everyone is cordially invited to attend all concerts

LEGITIMATE ADVERTISING

Modesty is a good thing, but like every other good thing, it can become morbid and can either trail off into secrecy that invites questionable methods or into conservatism that refuses to advance.

Advertising, when it is not exaggerated and blatant, but when it is carried on with dignity and truth, ought to grow with a man's business. A concern that does a million dollars worth of business should do a hundred times more advertising than a concern that does ten thousand dollars worth of business.

For advertising is not only the means of getting customers, it is also one of the best means of retaining them and keeping them satisfied.

To let the whole world know that you believe yourself, that you are doing honestly and well, goes a long way toward convincing the whole world of the same thing.

Advertising re-acts upon quality.

WORLD RADIO CONFERENCE

The Government has begun preparations for calling a world conference on radio, to be held at Washington, D. C. This would be a sequel to the London conference of 1912.

At this conference, the strides in radio and communication since the 1912 convention will be taken up along lines demanded by more modern conditions.

When the London meeting was held, only wireless communication between ship and shore stations was considered, but at the forthcoming gathering the radio telephone broadcasting methods and similar improvements will be studied with the idea of adjusting them to international requirements.

Bandit Al Jennings Writes of O. Henry

"Through the Shadows With O. Henry," is the title of a recent book by Al. Jennings, reformed bandit. The book reviewer of the Christian Science Monitor has the following to say concerning the book:

"This book on the dark years of O. Henry is of the utmost interest to the legion of that author's readers, for it shows where he found the basic themes for many of his stories and gives us a glimpse into his conception and working out of these themes. His well managed lightness of touch is a result of his thought on the depth of feeling and of suffering to which his characters are capable of descending.

"And then, aside from the interest of the search for the workings of his mentality during the years in which his literary ability was forming, the book is filled with anecdotes of a little-known type of life and concerns itself with people in conditions of which the great majority of people know nothing. It is not always pleasant reading, certainly, for realistic accounts of prison life do not make for a happy atmosphere in writing. However, the book is replete with items of the deepest human interest. That the omission of 20 pages in the middle of the review copy left the reviewer wretched until a perfect copy could be found, gives some idea of the interest Mr. Jennings has put into his book.

A Strange Viewpoint

"There are odd twists. O. Henry served a term in prison for embezzlement of funds, while the author of this biography, Al. Jennings, was sentenced for outlawry of the most desperate sort. Yet there is not apparent here the faintest twinge of regret for their deeds, nor any sense of a wrong done by them which still remained to be righted on their release from prison.

"Another strange twist is the feeling on the part of the biographer that at bottom he was not to blame for the life of the outlaw he had chosen. It was always, 'If So and So had done differently at such and such a time.' It has not occurred to Mr. Jennings to look within himself for the source of any of his errors. He has not stopped to consider that others have faced misfortune and yet made good.

"But apart from these ethical points, Mr. Jennings has written a book of interest and importance.

"Jennings and his brother, another outlaw, were fleeing detectives in Central America, where they found O. Henry, who was bent on the same quest as theirs, freedom from fetters. Wandering into Mexico, they eventually struck the southwestern United States, where they parted. The Jenningses were caught, one sent to Leavenworth and Al. to the Ohio Penitentiary, where he again found O. Henry.

Made Few Friends

"They made few friends. With some of the better class of men—better intellectually, not morally—they formed a somewhat satiric club, of which O. Henry was the shining wit. The stories of the various cells were related to him, and of these he separated the wheat from the chaff and used what material he thought advisable for his stories.

"The majority of his themes at this time were tales of hearsay. Later, when he and Jennings had been released and met once more in New York, he found his settings and his characters for himself and wove his imaginative tales about them, always remembering the lessons of human nature he had learned in the penitentiary.

"If you are one of O. Henry's admirers, you will welcome the new light thrown on his character by this book. If you are not, you may yet be vastly interested by what Al. Jennings has to tell."

JUST KIDDING

Being the Semi-Serious Musings of Carmel's Own Sam Pepys

WHEN ONE treks theaterward in Carmel it's not a bad bet to know just where the attraction is holding forth. For theaters, be it known, are numerically strong, catering to every taste. We noted in the Pine Cone that a play was to be given. We craved to see it. We had the necessary two dollars. Tickets were on sale at the Palace Drug Store. We conversed with the bride and decided to go. "Better get seats now so's to be sure," suggested the bride. We knew Ocean Avenue and Mr. Bickle of the Palace Drug Store. So we set forth in the dusk of evening, flashlight and two dollars in hand. We promised to return in twenty minutes, leaving the bride stirring sliced green peppers and wafered mushrooms into a partly-browned sirloin pot-roast. It was about four bells of the first dog watch.

AT THE emporium of drugs and theater tickets we saw the friendly face of Tom Bickle. We admitted a desire to see the show, and fished out our two dollars. "I'm sorry," Tom said, "but the tickets have all been sent over to the theater." We left. A boy with newspapers passed us. We followed and detained him. "And pray where might be the theater?" we asked. He pointed up the street. "Next block. Right-hand side. You can't miss it." Nor did we.

THE SIGN, Manzanita Theater, arrested our attention, as did the boards beside the ticket window. There was a four-sheet poster of a man on a pinto horse, six-gun in one hand, Eva Novak maybe draped across the other. It might have represented Tom Mix or Buck Jones. We knew 'em both in Hollywood. Didn't care to see 'em caper on the screen. And Eva was gaining all the time. And anyway, we didn't see where they cut in on "Shore Acres." The sound of an organist practising inside brought us to our senses and we realized that we were in front of Carmel's movie house. Verily there must be another theater in Carmel-by-the-Sea.

A man in a chef's white cap and apron passed, humming audibly what might have been a merry tune. "Is there another theater up this way?" we asked. "There is," the hummer answered, and gave us brief particulars. We toiled on up a hill. We passed a house where a battery of typewriters clicked. We espied a sign, noted that we were hot on the trail, and felt relieved that we had no forbidden dogs with us. We passed on up a path, flashing our light ahead, and came presently to a grove of trees. There were buildings and benches of sorts, an amphitheater silent as the grave, fragrant with the night wind sifting through the pines. We stared. It grew chill. "How dared they," we mused, "give 'Shore Acres' out of doors in such season at this Theater of the Forest?" A pine cone crashed from a bough above and fell at our feet. And lo! it spoke. "Know ye," it said "that thou art standing on sacred ground. This be the pioneer theater of Carmel. Earnest souls have here labored and given the best that is in them, and with no thought of sordid recompense. Remember ye not 'Kismet'? 'Caesar and Cleopatra'? Have never ye heard of 'Yellow Jacket'?" And then we remembered. In the prints we had read of Carmel's Forest Theater, of John Hilliard, of Herbert Heron, of Mrs. Hand, of Edward Kuster and his colossal "Caesar and Cleopatra." Spectacular successes! Glorious failures! Yet one and all colorful and sincere and executed with fine artistry, with loving hearts and willing hands. To the hangnail of moon-silver floating serene over a neighboring pine we doffed our cap. "Guard this well, Lady Moon," we breathed, "for here indeed is holiday territory wherein a man laboreth for love alone, and with no eye to his purse." And then we brushed the pine cone gently from our path and pursued our quest of "Shore Acres."

WE FOUND the third theater, a massive structure nestling in a court which breathed of the Old World. There was a weaver's shop in front, and at the side a tiny window displaying an announcement having to do with tickets. But the shop was empty, the loom-silent, a bit of gray fabric dangling from it. We peered in at the windows of neighboring shops in this Court of the Golden Bough. From a glimpse of what might well have been Old Amsterdam, we passed to a view of rare bindings behind plate glass. Brave volumes and many magazines tempted us. We fled and peered in at another window. Carved teak and jade stared back at us. A mandarin coat of rose and gold, another of ashes and silver, hung mute in the dim light of this shop of the Foo Chow Road. We turned from Shanghai. We rounded a corner where floated up to us from a basement shop the perfume of a thousand and one blooms. We gained the far side of the theater, and looked up at a perspective which would have pleased Junipero Serra and invoked his blessing. Silent, strong, dignified and impressive, the side of this Theater of the Golden Bough towered above us. And we wondered why all was dark.

A MAIDEN of twelve or so romped by, perhaps from some gathering of her clan. It was dark, yet unafraid she answered us. "The show," she said, "is not at this theater. It's being given at the Arts and Crafts Theater, three blocks down on the right-hand side. It's dark down that way. There's no sign. But you'll know when to turn in because there's a 'No Parking' notice in front of it." We thanked this maid of Carmel. In the darkness we held on, our flashlight refusing duty. Another maiden, headed for the bright lights, bumped into us. There was a glimpse of blonde hair and entangling hairnet due to a hastily raised right arm, mutual apologies and a parting. So help us! that's all. We stumbled on.

TIME SALVES all our wounds and helps us find that which we seek, and in time we located the Theater of the Arts and Crafts, the habitat of "Shore Acres." But there in the dim lobby we faced a closed ticket window. We said words which are unseemly. We hesitated a bit. We lighted a cigarette. We gave thought on the "twenty minutes," the bride and the pot-roast with green peppers and mushrooms. And in this moment of our distress came to us from back-stage a courtly man with fine blue eyes and mustache and goatee of silver. Men called him "Doctor," and departed. We misjudged him by virtue of his flannel shirt and worn corduroys, placing him as a doctor of cattle and such, to learn to our astonishment that he was in reality a retired Dean of the Institute of Technology, which is in Boston of Massachusetts.

THIS 'SIEUR de Montaigne, this learned one in humble garb, set us straight. "Selah!" he said, "you have found it. Come back at eight and buy all the tickets you need. The ticket seller is at supper. The members of the cast are supping not. For by the grace of the Highlands Inn, the Pine Inn and the La Playa Hotel, there are to be turkeys eaten at each performance. No papier-mache business about this playhouse." We turned on our heel and with "Hope you run all winter, Dean," we stumbled homeward.

IT WAS close on three bells of the second dog watch. The bride was almost in tears, the Airedales sniffed curiously, the pot-roast was done to a whisper. We started explaining, when the bride's blue eyes showed little points of fire. Startled, we followed her gaze. We saw a mesh of hairnet on the button of our sleeve, a strand of blonde hair limned against the darkness of the cloth. We had been gone from the house nearly two hours. We tried to explain. We've been explaining ever since. But we kissed and called a truce, and went to see "Shore Acres."

ANYWAY, IT WAS A GOOD SHOW

Glendale, California,
March 21, 1925.

Editor, Carmel Pine Cone.
My dear Mr. Overstreet:

Will you grant me the courtesy of your columns to say in reference to Mr. Kuster's letter in your issue of March 14, that I myself only learned a few days ago, through one of Mr. Ervine's letters, that the Carmel production of "The Ship" was not its world premiere?

Messrs. Brand and Brand, Mr. Ervine's New York agents, were under the impression that it was; its announcement as such was based on the information received from them. Mr. Kuster was aware of this fact.

Yours very truly,
MAURICE BROWNE.

THE BOY SCOUTS

A talk by W. H. Normand of Santa Cruz, Scout Executive of the Loma Prieta District, will be given in the school room of the Carmel church, Wednesday, April first at 8:00 p. m. The subject will be Boy Scout organization and its value in character building. The magnitude of the organization and what has so far been accomplished will be touched upon.

No parents of boys, especially the fathers, should miss this. A general invitation is extended to all who are interested in this wonderful boy uplift movement. Remember that a boy of fourteen or fifteen is the citizen and voter in six or seven short years.

GOTTFRIED JOBS

Among the new residences which L. E. Gottfried has under way are: The completion of a remodeled home for J. A. Landsberger on north Carmelo street, just inside the drive, and finishing the A. W. Weldon residence on Thirteenth and San Carlos. It is to be a seven-room stucco house with royal shingled roof and exterior. The Weldons are from Pasadena.

The new Bloomin Basement is now under construction. It is located on the corner of Ocean avenue and Lincoln street. It will be a story and a half building of English architecture, designed and built by Mr. Gottfried.

Deciding Games Tomorrow---Perhaps

Team Standing

	W	L	Pc.
SEALS	6	3	.666
SHARKS	6	3	.666
SARDINES	5	4	.555
WHALES	4	5	.444
SANDABS	3	6	.333
GOLDFISH	3	6	.333

The winner of the Abalone Leagues 1925 Hooper Cup Series may be decided tomorrow. The last place occupant certainly will.

If either the Seals or Sharks can win while the rival outfit is losing, the club will cop the pennant without further argument.

If both win, the tie for first place will be continued and an extra game will be staged to determine the winners.

If both the Seals and Sharks lose there will be the further complication of a triple tie with the Sardines in No. 3 corner. The schedule for tomorrow brings the Seals and Sardines to grips in the second game, and if the kids' team can knock down the Tal Josselyn entry and the Whales take the measure of Winsor Josselyn's Sharks the triple-tie will be knotted.

Last week's games were responsible for the hectic condition in which the league finds itself on the eve of the last scheduled game of the series. Eddie Burns' Whales rose up and crowned the leaderless Seals by a count of 16 to 9. It was the Whale's game all the way, but it remained for Art Schoell, Seal left-fielder, to shine as the individual star of the combat. Art got four hits in four tries and was a three-ring circus in the left field. Al lthrough the game he played spectacularly but rose to real heights of glory in the sixth when his leaping one-hand catch smeared an ambitious attempt at a home run. On the first batter in the seventh inning the fielding demon got under another wallop, juggled it from hand to hand and finally held it for an out.

The Shark-Sandab contest was a battle from start to finish. With two out and two on base in the final frame, the Sandabs with Charley Berkey at bat still looked to have a chance. Berkey, crack hitter and with four safe ones already to his credit in the game, never got a chance to swing. Todd, Sandab catcher, made an attempt to steal third that ended in an out and defeat. Billy Hudson, at third for the Sandabs held one of the hottest liners in history, for the fielding feature of the game. Halstead Yates gets honorable mention for a ringing clout to left.

It was in this hot game that Rafe Todd pulled the prize boner of the season, attempting to steal third, while the third-baseman held the ball.

The wind-up between the Goldfish and Sardines was a ragged effort. The Sardines got the jump on their adversaries but the Goldfish rushed over an eight-run rally in the fifth and took the lead. In the sixth the Sardines gained a momentary one-run advantage with Lona Zaches driving a hit to left field to clean up the bases. Then the Goldfish counted two to gain a lead of one for their team and shut the foe out in the final session.

In the first game tomorrow, at one o'clock, the Snadabs and Goldfish will fight it out for the cellar championship. The loser wins the poison oak of last place. Following, will come the Seal-Sardine and Shark-Whale games.

FYR FYTER Service

A FYR FYTER used at the start of the fire, may easily be more effective than the work of an entire Fire Department five minutes later.

FIRST AID FIRE PROTECTION is just what the name implies—Fire apparatus close at hand, always ready for immediate use when needed.

When guarding against Fire you are guarding against the unexpected, and the saving of a few dollars in not having enough extinguishers may mean thousands of dollars of loss and the loss of a human life.

The Protection you receive from FYR FYTER SERVICE is lower than insurance or any kind of protection you can name.
